If you are computer-literate (which ideally you should be), you should be prepared to visit recommended websites. You should also cultivate the habit of visiting reputable libraries accessible to you.

HOW TO GET THE MOST FROM THIS COURSE

1. There are 25 units in this course. You are to spend one week in each unit. In distance learning, the study units replace the university lecture. This is one of the great advantages of distance learning; you can read and work through specially designed study materials at your own pace, and at a time and place that suites you best. Think of it as reading the lecture instead of listening to the lecturer. In the same way a lecturer might give you some reading to do. The study units tell you when to read and which are your text materials or recommended books. You are provided exercises to do at appropriate points, just as a lecturer might give you in a class exercise.

2. Each of the study units follows a common format. The first item is an introduction to the subject matter of the unit, and how a particular unit is integrated with other units and the course as a whole. Next to this is a set of learning objectives. These objectives let you know what you should be able to do, by the time you have completed the unit. These learning objectives are meant to guide your study. The moment a unit is finished, you must go back and check whether you have achieved the objectives. If this is made a habit, then you will significantly improve your chance of passing the course.
3. The main body of the unit guides you through the required reading from other sources. This will usually be either from your reference or from a reading section.
4. The following is a practical strategy for working through the course. If you run into any trouble, telephone your tutor or visit the study center nearest to you. Remember that your tutor's job is to help you. When you need assistance, do not hesitate to call and ask your tutor to provide it.
5. Read this course guide thoroughly. It is your first assignment.
6. Organise a study schedule- Design a 'Course Overview' to guide you through the course. Note the time you are expected to spend on each unit and how the assignments relate to the units.
7. Important information; e.g. details of your tutorials and the date of the first day of the semester is available at the study center.
8. You need to gather all the information into one place, such as your diary or a wall calendar. Whatever method you choose to use, you should decide on write in your own dates and schedule of work for each unit.
9. Once you have created your own study schedule, do everything to stay faithful to it.
10. The major reason that students fail is that they get behind in their coursework.
11. If you get into difficulties with your schedule please let your tutor or course coordinator know before it is too late for help.

12. Turn to Unit 1, and read the introduction and the objectives for the unit.
13. Assemble the study materials. You will need your references for the unit you are studying at any point in time.
14. As you work through the unit, you will know what sources to consult for further information.
15. Visit your study center whenever you need up-to-date information.
16. Well before the relevant online TMA due dates, visit your study center for relevant information and updates. Keep in mind that you learn a lot by doing the assignment carefully. There have been designed to help you meet the objectives of the course and, therefore, will help you pass the examination.
17. Review the objectives for each study unit to confirm that you have achieved them. If you feel unsure about any of the objectives, review the study materials or consult your tutor. When you are confident that you have achieved a unit's objectives, you can start on the next unit. Proceed unit by unit through the course and try to space your study so that you can keep yourself on schedule.
18. After completing the last unit, review the course and prepare yourself for the final examination. Check that you have achieved the unit objectives (listed at the beginning of each unit) and the course objectives (listed in the course guide).

CONCLUSION

This course is from the Social Science family and you can only get the best of it if you realise this and cultivate the habit of relating to it in line with the interconnectedness of the other Social Science disciplines.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The essence of this unit is to expose the student to the true meaning of Local Government as a concept. This has become imperative as the knowledge of this, lays the foundation for more understanding of other issues which will be discussed in later modules. At the end of this unit, you should be able to discuss and understand the meaning of Local Government as a concept in the Evolution of Local Government in Nigeria.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- articulate a proper definition of Local Government
- define Local Government as a Unit of Government
- identify Local Government as a field of study in Public Administration.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Definition of Local Government

Local government refers to a political sub-division, which are created within a state for the exercise of duties and responsibilities granted by constitutional provisions or legislative enactments. Local governments are infra-sovereign geographic units found within sovereign nation or quasi-sovereign state. Like other units of governments, local governments possess a defined area, a population, an organisation, also the authority to undertake, and the power to perform public activities. Local government is the smallest unit of administration in any political system. It is the lowest level of government in a modern state structure that is legally distinct with powers to raise its own revenue and to undertake delegated responsibilities as provided for by the constitution. It is the lowest level through which representative government can be practised. In Nigeria, there are three-tiers of government, i.e. Federal, State and Local Government. The local government is the third-tier of government and that placed it in a position of nearness to the people at the grassroots or local communities. Its closeness to the local populace enables it to perform special functions and services, which bother on the interests and aspirations of the local communities. Local government can be defined as an organisation with a resident population occupying a defined region that has a usually authorised organisation and government body; a separated legal entity, the power to provide certain public or governmental services and a substantial degree of autonomy including legal or actual power to raise part of its own revenue.

Local government is seen by some scholars as essentially a political institution, which aims at not only to train its members for citizenship but also to get various services run for the benefit of the community. Within its territory, a local government unit seeks to give opportunities to the people for the expression of their opinion concerning local affairs. It enables them to choose their representatives to take care of local affairs on their behalf. Quasi-sovereign state are those in which the supreme political authority and power is divided between the central government of the country as a whole and the federated state government of the major constituent geographical parts. Each of them within its own sphere is supreme and independent of the other. It is seen that local government is concerned with localities and not with the country as a whole; it must for this reason be subordinate to the national government. The term further implies some jurisdiction or activity of public nature; it implies the existence of authorities empowered to exercise that jurisdiction and activity. According to US Bureau of the census, a unit of local government must exhibit three qualifications; first, it must exist as an organized entity possessing organisation and some minimum powers, second, it must have governmental character as an agency of the public to whom it must be accountable and third, it must possess substantial autonomy.

Lockard, (1968) also defines local government as a public organisation authorised to decide and administer a large range of public policies within a relatively small territory, which is subdivided of a regional or national government. Local government is at the bottom of a pyramid of governmental institutions with the national government at the top and intermediate governmental state, regions, provinces, occupying in middle range.

3.2 Local Government as a Unit of Government

Arising from the various policy changes regarding the size, structure, functions and operations of the local government system and, in particular, the decision to implement the federal executive presidential system of government, and its logic at local government level, it has become necessary to comprehensively include the local government as viable unit of government. Local Government as a unit of government placed it in a position where it performs those specific functions and duties which the other two-tiers of government would not have been able to perform with efficiency and effectiveness. The local government is the first-stop interaction of governance with the local communities and the people. The local government is the platform through which the people are represented in government at the lowest level of governance. As a unit of government, the local government is created to meet the peculiar needs of the people at the grassroots, this is very vital because every community has its peculiar characteristics, needs and value system, that differentiate it from another community.

As a unit of government, it is also a channel through which local interest are aggregated and transmitted to the other two-tiers of government. The local government as a unit of government is set out to define the scope and limits of the powers, functions and responsibilities of the different arms and functionalities of government at the local level as well as their roles and relationships with the organs and functionaries of the higher tiers of government with a view to minimizing the effects and burden of governance associated with federal and state government. In the past local government was not recognized as a unit of government because there was no constitutional backing. It was perceived as an administrative convenience, which serves the purpose of an outlet for federal and state government. It is the consistent development and evolution of local government, coupled with the increasing functions performed by local government to the people at the grassroots that has transformed the local government as a viable unit of government. In the primitive era, it serves the interests and aspirations of the local people, in the colonial era, it serves the more the interest of the colonialists, under the military regimes, it serves the interest of the people as dictated by the military and under the democratic regimes it is perceived to serve the interests and aspirations of the people at the grassroots.

3.3 Local Government as a Field of Study in Public Administration

The Social Sciences is a wide field of study. It consists of disciplines such as Sociology, Economics, Geography, Psychology, Political Science and sometimes Management Sciences. Each of these fields also has its branches or areas of specialization. Our main concern in this study is Political Science, which has International Relations, Political Economy, Public Administration and Comparative and Development Studies as its branches. Local government as a study is a sub-unit under Public Administration. It is one of the various branches of Public Administration. As a field of study Local Government has gained prominence since the early 1980s and some universities in Nigeria have started awarding degrees in Local Government Studies. The essence is to create an in-depth knowledge on the importance of local government as a vital unit of governance.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss local government as a unit of government.

4.0 CONCLUSION

The concept of the local government as a third-tier of governance is predicated on the principle of bringing the instrument of governance closer to the communities and harnessing the interests and aspirations of the local communities in an inputs-outputs analysis in governance. The local government also is an avenue through which the people can exercise their political rights through representatives at the local councils established by law to perform specific powers within their jurisdictions. The local government is a distinct legal entity and has power to raise its own revenue within its areas of jurisdiction as provided for in the constitution.

5.0 SUMMARY

An attempt has been made to give the definition of local government as the smallest unit of administration in any political system. It is the lowest level of government in a modern state structure that is legally distinct with powers to raise its own revenue and to undertake delegated responsibilities as provided for by the constitution. We also established that local government is the lowest of the three-tiers of government in Nigeria. We have also established that it has its own power in its areas of jurisdictions to perform specific functions as delegated by the constitution. We also indicated that the local government is the closest unit of government to the people and communities and by virtue of this, can aggregate the interests and aspirations of the people at the local levels for further transmission to the other tiers of government. Finally, we also identify the local government as a field of study in public administration, which is a branch of political science in order to expose the intellectual complexity associate with local government administration.

6.0 TUTOR-MARKED ASSIGNMENT

1.0 INTRODUCTION

There have been debates among scholars as to whether there is a theory or theories of local government. The local government as a field of study is relatively new; therefore, scholars are still skeptical about a sacrosanct theory for local government. As a fast-growing field of study and administrative unit of government, the local government evolved some theories, which are useful for our discussion in this unit. We shall examine the efficiency services theory, the democracy school of local government and the Accountability and control theory, etc.

2.0 OBJECTIVE

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- explain clearly, the five streams of theories of local government.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 The Efficiency Services Delivery Theory

This is of the view that local government occupies the best position for the efficient performance of those specific functions, which the constitution prescribed. Yampolskiy, R. V. (2011) opined that the peculiar nature of the local government placed it in a position to perform those functions efficiently due to its closeness to the people at the grassroots. The efficiency services theory also stipulates that the smallness of the population allow for efficient provision of the basic social amenities. In the works of Majekodunmi, A. (2012), this system also allows for flexibility in decision-making and implementation. In addition, Efficiency services delivery theory implies that local government exist to articulate and aggregate the interests and aspirations of the people for better and more efficient services.

The theory argues that what is central and important to the people is the knowledge and articulation of the problem confronting the people and finding appropriate solutions to the problems. The theory further argued that since the officials of the local government councils are indigenes of the areas, they are in a better position to understand the needs of the people and provide efficient services for their welfare.

3.2 The Democratic Participatory Theory

This theory perceives the local government as an avenue for the local populace to participate in politics. Michels and De Graaf, (2017) explains that this school of thought believes that the local government provides the training ground for local populace to engage in democratic governance. The theory argues essentially that the local government provides the citizens at the community level, the opportunities for political participation, interest aggregation, political education and political socialization.

3.3 The Developmental and Accountability Control Theory

This theory stipulates that the local government is an effective agent of change. This change encompasses social and economic development, work force resource development, national integration and better share of the national wealth. Slater, (2011) said that this theory also argues that the local government also creates an avenue for proper accountability and control because, the people are familiar with the elected officials and the success of the representatives can be judged in the way the people perceived the performance of their duties effectively and efficiently for the collective good of the communities.

The extent to which the elected officials achieve their designated duties and functions determines the level of trust and confidence the people will have in re-electing such an official. Therefore, the developmental and accountability control theory serve as a check and litmus test on the representatives of the local government.

3.4 The Holistic Integrationist School

This school view local government from a narrower and more particularistic point. The school is of the opinion that a political system that is culturally plural, socially diffused and not strictly differentiated, a more holistic view of roles is inevitable. The practical implication of the view of this school is that local government exists consciously to make its own contributions to and thereby help to achieve national integration, national evolution and national consciousness.

A section of academia has suggested that local governments perform this holistic- integrationist function through:

1. Decongesting government at the center thereby freeing national leaders from onerous details and unnecessary involvement in local issues.
2. Increasing people's understanding and enlightening people about economic (community) development.
3. Making programmes to foster social and economic betterment at the local level more realistic and lasting.
4. Training people in the art of self-government.

3.5 Integrating the Different Schools of Thoughts

The holistic integrationist school is more concerned with the programmatic approach of how local government can be an effective agent of a better life, bring an improved means of living, develop a people more conscious of their dependence on, and need for one another. Both the democratic participatory school and the efficiency services schools are built on basic values that are not in any way contradictory to the ideals of the holistic school.

Hence functional criteria of the theories could be summed up under two major headings as follows:

1. The General category, which sums up the deals of the Democratic-Participatory School and the Efficiency-Services Delivery School under the functional items are:
 - a. Democratic ideals
 - b. Political participation
 - c. Protective services
 - d. Infrastructural services
2. The Development category consists mainly of the Holistic-Integrationists ideals summoned under the functional items are:
 - a. National integration
 - b. Socio- economic development
 - c. Manpower resource development

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Differentiate between the Developmental, Accountability Control Theory and the Holistic Integrationist School

4.0 CONCLUSION

The theory of local government is an important aspect of the local government discourse both as a unit of government and as a field of study. The theories are to explain the complex phenomenon associated with local government. The local government as the smallest unit of government might appear smaller, but its complexity and dynamics need to be approached and explained with the use of local government theories. It is only with theoretical explanation that an in-depth knowledge of the study of local government can be accomplished. Therefore, the use of the theories of local government cannot be overemphasized in this study.

5.0 SUMMARY

In this unit, we have attempted to look at the meaning and use of theory to the study of local government. We have been able to establish that theory is a tool for the explanation of complex phenomenon and its use cannot be overemphasized in the study of local government. Finally, we established that these theoretical explanations will give in- depth knowledge in the study of local government.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

One of the major features of Local Government Administration is decentralisation. This is one distinctive feature of Local Government that the central government does not have. It is one major platform through which local resources, initiatives and inputs are mobilised and transformed for national development. It is through this platform that local autonomy, management of their own affairs and transfer of power from central government to local authorities can be realized.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to explain:

- decentralisation
- deconcentration
- delegation
- devolution
- privatization
- other features of local government.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Decentralisation

The strategic position of the local government is more pronounced through the instrument of decentralisation. This is an important aspect of local government as a unit of government because it creates the enabling environment for democratization and development. The goals of decentralisation can be perceived as follows; local government provide for popular participation through the implementation of the democratic principle of elective representativeness in the public decision-making process; encourage local initiative and sacrifice and mobilise the human and financial resources that are available in the locality for development; ensure adequate provision for social services necessary for a decent life; and establish a functioning communication channel between the central authority and the local institutions with a view to ensuring the effectiveness of the central government's actions. Decentralisation can also be discussed in four basic variances such as deconcentration, delegation, devolution and privatization.

3.2 Deconcentration

This is the transfer of administrative functions from central government or national ministries to field agencies within the local level. It involves the redistribution of executive responsibilities to sub-administrative structure. Here, the local or sub-ordinate levels of governments serve as agents of the central government. Deconcentration is a process of breaking down tasks and transferring it to the local levels for implementation. The feature here is that, the decision-making is at the central level, while the local government presents the platform for implementation, e.g. primary health care, universal primary education etc. Deconcentration can be regarded as a limited form of decentralisation and it lessens the burden of central government. For deconcentration to take place, provincial or local government is essential.

3.3 Delegation

The central government transfers some level of responsibilities for decision-making and implementation of specific functions to some other branch of government through this process. Under the delegation, these other branch of government and agencies are granted some level of autonomy or powers to formulate and implement programmes over specific functions without the direct control of the central government. Delegation also means conferring of specified authority to a lower authority. Legally, the delegated authority still belongs to the principal, but in practice, its exercise is allowed to the subordinate or lower authority. Delegation is full when complete powers are conferred on the agent or lower authority. Delegation is conditional when the action of a subordinate is subject to confirmation or revision by the superior; it is unconditional when the subordinate or lower authority is free to act without reservations. Delegation is formal when embodied in written form based on customs, conventions and understanding. Delegation is direct when no third person intervenes between the two parties to delegation; it is intermediate when it is made through third person.

Delegation of authority means more than simply assigning duties to others in more or less detail. The essence of delegation is to confer discretion upon others to use their judgment in meeting specific problems within the framework of their duties. One cannot delegate the authority which himself does not possess. Authority once delegated can be enhanced, reduced or withdrawn according to the changing circumstances.

3.4 Devolution

This involves the transfer of functional responsibilities including decision-making authority to legally incorporated sub-national units of government. It entails therefore, the transfer of political authority to make decisions in some spheres of public policy from the central government to local government or similar units at the local level. The central and the local governments are structurally differentiated in the structural pattern of devolution. Each level has its own powers and separate institutions for performing its own functions and activities. Devolution is associated with local autonomy and with increase scope for popular participation in governmental activities. Under the devolution category, local governments are granted powers to source for their revenue, control their finances as well as recruit their own personnel.

Devolution indicate status and policy making power. Devolution of power is also designed to create a political environment in which power to access political, economic and social resources is distributed between the central government and lower levels of government. State authority is divided among a wide range of actors, making politics less threatening and therefore encouraging joint problem solving. Devolution creates a fairer political ground, protects groups and individual human rights, establishes check and balances to central power and prevents political violence among rival groups.

3.5 Privatization

This is a new form of decentralisation. Under privatization, other players such as community groups, corporate organisations, voluntary associations, cooperatives, business association, civil society groups and other non-governmental organisations enter into Public-Private Partnership (PPP) to provide goods and services for the benefits of the local communities. PPP can also refer to contractual agreements formed between a public agency and private sector entity that allow for greater private sector participation in the delivery of essential goods and services. PPP relate or connote perfection and practices affecting public private sector relationships in ensuring national global health, development and well-being of the society

3.6 Other Features of Local Government

There are other features of local government, which include structural differentiation, that is, it has a corporate identity and status different from other forms of government. It possesses the authority and institutional powers for which it has been created. The local government also has multi-functional powers, which include the power to legislate, formulate and implement policies for the benefits of its people. The local government also has defined territorial boundaries, just like other tiers of government, it has jurisdiction over people inhabiting its geographical territories, and finally, its elected or appointed officers or representatives have specified tenure of office.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss deconcentration and delegation as variances of decentralisation

4.0 CONCLUSION

The peculiarity of local government is situated in its decentralisation features. An examination of these features depicts local government system as an indispensable unit in every democratic society. The instrument of decentralisation permits the local government to have and exercise its own identity as a unit of governance. These distinctive attributes make the local government to acquire its significance in the performance of its specific functions in the general administration of the country.

5.0 SUMMARY

This unit has succinctly examined the features of Local Government and identified the goals of the decentralisation as the yardstick for measuring Local Government achievements. They provide the basic framework for integrating and harnessing local initiatives, interests, and aspirations into national development programme which serve as channels for the transmission of inter-governmental relations.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Local Government has been variously classified into different types to provide the needed clarity in understanding the scope, structure, functions and opportunities it provides for participation in government and as a machinery for policy direction at the local level. The prevailing political system under which Local Government operates has been a major determinant in classification or typology. This is more so, when we remember that Local Government is a semi-autonomous and sub-national political arrangement, reflecting the political ideology or system of the Central Government.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- discuss the French system of Local Government
- reflect on the Socialist/Communist system
- critically analyse the Anglo-Saxon (British) system
- explain the Traditional system
- ruminate on the Post-Colonial system.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 The French system of Local Government

The French system of local government is the most widespread of all the patterns in the world. In this system, local government is perceived more or less as the local arm of the central government. In this pattern, the central government appoints an agent at the local government. This agent is called "Prefect".

The prefect is a Senior Civil Servant and a representative of the central government who looks after the interests and programmes of the central government in the assigned area of jurisdiction as well as overseeing the affairs of the local administrative machinery. The French system of local government is highly centralized. Centralization is the essence of the system. All authority converges inward and upward. It can be charted in the form of a perfect pyramid. In France, it is assumed that the Minister of Interior presses the button and the Prefects, the Sub-Prefects, the Mayors and Deputy Mayors do the rest. The peculiarity of this style of local government is that the central government places in sub-regions of the nation an agent of the central government to oversee and if necessary, to counter, suspend or replace local government.

3.2 The Socialist/Communist system

The Socialist/Communist system of local government constitutes part of complex governmental agencies whose purpose is socialist planning for economic development of the whole country. Here, the communist party exercises firm direction and leadership required for central planning. In this system, all subordinate units of government operate and take directions from centrally pre-determined decision. There is little or no initiative emanating from the local or sub-national government. Local independence is restricted as control device are extensive and vigorously applied. This system connotes that the local government is an agency of the central government and part of the central administration through strict party discipline and compliance. The local government in the communist countries is an example of deconcentration of authority rather than decentralisation. In other words, the local government unit is an agency of the central government and its functions are an integral element of hierarchical administrative system of the state. The area of local independence is narrow and extends only to minor matters whereas control devices are extensive and vigorously applied.

3.3 The Anglo-Saxon or the British system

The Anglo-Saxon or the British system of local government bases its emphasis on the autonomy of the local government. This autonomy is expressed through its policy-making organ or a council of elected or appointed members representing local interest. Here, the institutions of local government are distinctively separated from those of the central government. Also, as a separate tier of government its sources of revenue and personnel management are clearly defined and spelt out in an official document. In this type of local government system, there is often time, a local government service commission or board, which is charged with the responsibilities for the recruitment and management of local government personnel. The underlying basis of local government is the principle of self-determination in which every community is given substantial measure of freedom in the administration of its own affairs. This prevents the local government from rigid and absolute control from the above. However, the degree of autonomy of local governments varies from country to country but in all cases, a considerable degree of local independence prevails.

3.4 The Traditional system

The Traditional system of local government is sometimes referred to as the “non-western” patterns of local government. This pattern refers to the pre-colonial or pre-literate types in many underdeveloped or developing countries of the world where local administration are centered or structured around traditional political institutions such as the chief or traditional rulers, council of elders, the extended family system or the clan system. Here, the local traditional institutions formulate and implement policies for the traditional communities. The policies often times have been a reflection of the socio-political and culture realities of their environments.

3.5 The Post-Colonial system

The Post-Colonial system of the local government is associated with the newly independent nations of the world faced with the need for economic growth and the extension of new national power to the communities and the rapidly growing cities. The post -colonial system cut across all the other system in a modern-day local government structure. The creation of new nations from former colonies involves varying degrees of local government. In some cases, the party-political system has subverted adjustments rather than revolutionary change has been made, local government patterns have not altered drastically. The legacy of colonialism is omnipresent however much the new leaders strive for break from the colonial past.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss the major differences and similarities between the Socialist/Communist system and the Anglo-Saxon (British) system.

4.0 CONCLUSION

The classification of local government into various types is predicated on the functions, which are to be performed, the political system under which it is to operate and the communities that it is meant to serve. The basic essence of the classification is to determine the level of autonomy that is to be granted to the local government authorities. It is also to locate the amount of powers and authorities that such local government is to possess. Since local government, autonomy is not absolute; their level of autonomy can be found in their categorization.

5.0 SUMMARY

This unit has identified the various types of local government system. We have been able to discuss the most common classification of local government systems to include the French system which is often referred to as the “Prefect” system as practiced by the French system of government. We also discussed the socialist/communist system which is common among the Socialists and Communist states; where the local government is centrally controlled. Next, we examined the Anglo-Saxon or the British system where the level of autonomy and structure is clearly defined. The traditional system we examined as common in the developing countries where traditional institutions formulate and implement policies for the local communities. Finally, we identified the post-colonial system as associated with the newly independent states.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

This unit will examine justifications for the establishment of the Local Government as a system of governance. We will anchor our discussions on the quadruple pillars of political, administrative, developmental and channel of communication.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- advance reasons for political justification
- explain administrative justification
- discuss developmental justification
- discuss local government as a channel of communication.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Political Justification

This is one of the major reasons for the establishment of local government. Local government is said to provide the platform for local participation in politics and democracy. It provides the local citizens an opportunity to participate in the public affairs of their communities. Local government brings the government closer to the people within a geographical locality. It serves as an alternative to over concentration of political power at the central government. The complexity of modern government is simplified with the existence of local government. It promotes liberty, equality and local autonomy which requires the individuals and groups to express their views and that such view should be given equal regard in decision making process. Local government also serves as an avenue for gathering inputs from diverse localities into the policy making process at the central government. As an essential ingredient of democracy, local government provide the training ground for political leaders at the grassroots who gather such experience for national leadership. However, that local government provides a training ground for political leaders particularly at the central level is subject to debate, because, there are political leaders at the national level who did not participate in political affairs at the local level, this is coupled with the fact that some political leaders have failed elections at the local level, only to win at the national level. Again, there are no formal schools for political education at the local level that prepare political leaders for national politics. It has also been argued that national politics is so different in scale and dynamics that local experience and knowledge might be inadequate for understanding national affairs. The above notwithstanding, local participation is a vital instrument in democracy. Local government may be said to involve the conception of territorial, non-sovereign community possessing the legal right and the necessary organisation to regulate its own affairs. Local government also seek its justification from the fact that it is that part of government of a nation or state which deals mainly with such matters as concern the inhabitants of a particular district or place together with those matters which parliament has deemed it desirable subordinate to the central or national government.

3.2 Administrative Justification

The local government is perceived first and foremost to some scholars as administrative agency for efficient provision of services. Local government administration is to enhance the effective and efficient provision of services to the people at the local level. Here, the local government makes for the decongestion and decentralisation of administration at the central level and serves as an efficient provision of service to a measurable standard for the local communities. Most importantly, is the fact that the local government is closer to the people and it is in a position to understand and analysed the problems of the people. This closeness of the local government to the people also place it in a position to have better knowledge and information of the local communities with a view to providing those specific functions that directly affects the people. Again, the local government also gives the people a sense of belonging by participating in the alleviation of their immediate problems and promoting the necessary welfare which otherwise would have been difficult by the national or central government. However, the point must be made that there are specialized administrative functions that cannot be performed by the local government, this is because, the local government is a multi-purpose institution which provide general services to the people. Local government is governments consisting of certain sub-ordinate bodies which have defined power making rules and regulations within their prescribed area of administration.

3.3 Development Justification

The local government is regarded as the bedrock of developmental activities because of the feeling of attachment which the people have for the programmes emanating from their local communities. It provides the people a springboard to conduct their own affairs, mobilise, sustain and execute local developmental initiative in line with the local needs interests and aspirations of the people. Again, the local government is perceived as complementary in the division of labor among the various levels of governments, because the local government is said to have specialty in the efficient provision of those developmental services that are local specific.

However, some critics have argued that this justification of local government promote sectionalism and parochial interests and therefore, inimical to political and developmental integration at the national level. In spite of this, the role of the local government in developmental efforts particularly in those programmes and activities which they help to initiate cannot be over emphasized. Local government helps to cultivate, civil sense and responsibility among citizens and coordinates harmonies collaboration in common administration of common interest.

3.4 Local Government as a Channel of Communication

Local Government serves as inputs and outputs in the policy making process of the national government. New policies and programmes are sometimes test run at the local level by the national or central government to seek the realities and outcomes before it is implemented at the national level. The local government also serves as a channel of communication between the national government and the local government by aggregating the feelings, interests and aspirations of the local populace and transmitting same to the national. At the same time channel, the decisions from the national down to the local people. It is also important to note that local government serves as channel of communication among themselves.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

State the relevance of local government as a channel of communication among various levels of government in Nigeria.

4.0 CONCLUSION

The ultimate goal of every local government is to justify its creation and maintain its existence for the benefits of the people. It is also the ultimate aim of every democratic setting that the people should be governed by the smallest and closest unit of government for good governance and best practices. Therefore, the basic essence of creating local government is to service the interest of the people at the local level of government by performing those specific functions which affect the daily existence of the people. It is these justifications that have made Local Government a permanent feature in any modern democracy.

5.0 SUMMARY

This unit has discussed the essence and justification for the creation of local government as a unit of government. In the unit we have examined four basic reasons for the creation and maintenance of local government to include political justification, which gives the people at the local level an opportunity to be part of the political process and to represent their own political affairs; administrative justification which sees the local government as administrative agency for efficient provision of services for the local people; developmental justification which perceived the local government as the bedrock of developmental activities; and as channel of communication which lubricates inter-governmental relations.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Local government as a unit of government or administration dates back to the pre-colonial or primitive societies. According to Adeyemi, O. O. (2019), every society has always had a way of administering itself based on the structure of the society. Pre-colonial administrations in Nigeria have been based on the traditional setting that is prevalent in such societies. In this unit, we shall look at pre-colonial Nigeria from the regional groupings, that is, Hausa–Fulani in the northern parts of Nigeria where the emirate system is very strong and prevalent; the Yoruba in the western part where the Oba traditional system is prevalent; and the Igbo in the east which was republican in nature with the elders' council (Obasi and Nnamani, 2015). Administration in pre-colonial societies in Nigeria was independent of each other. The various regions administered their societies according to their culture and traditional institutions.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to explain the main structure of the pre-colonial administration in:

- Hausa-Fulani societies
- Yoruba societies
- Igbo societies
- Benin kingdom.

3.0 Main Content

3.1 Pre-Colonial Administration in the Hausa-Fulani Societies

Not until the Jihad, there was a pre-existing Hausa (Habe) Sarauta system. These Hausa societies were ruled by Habe kings, who were kings over each kingdom comprised of the capital city where the king hired and other numerous villages or cleavages characterized by the ruling class (Sarakuna) and the subjects (Talakawa) groupings. The villages were independent of each other but recognized the authority of the king. The king does not interfere in the village affairs except when the regular taxes or tributes for the maintenance and defence of the kingdom are not forthcoming. Each village was headed by the oldest male member of the strongest and most influential family and assisted by the elders of the less powerful families. This system of administration was truncated after the Fulani conquest and the introduction of the fiefs. With the introduction of the fiefdoms, the villages lost their independence and were now ruled by fief-holders who only have access to the paramount ruler or emirs. The Hausa-Fulani political system in the pre-colonial era was structured as follows:

- The compound as the basic unit of organisation
- The ward comprising of groups of compounds
- The village which consisted of a collection of wards
- The fief was a group of villages
- The emirate was a totality of the fiefs within a definable area
- The capital city was the seat of government

These structures also reflected the hierarchy of government, where the reporting and commanding structure is a vertical relationship.

3.2 Administration in the Yoruba Societies

The Yoruba societies, particular the Oyo Empire was a well-organized system of government. Although the political system was headed by a king (Alaafin), it was more or less a constitutional government with the various levels of governance well defined and structured. The Oyo government was structured to reflect the three arms of modern state of executive, legislature and the judiciary.

At the head of government and the executive is the king (Alaafin) who was regarded as a divine king and the personification of the whole state, theoretically, he could do anything but in practice he was assisted in government of the kingdom by his senior chiefs, who are responsible for collection of tributes, settlements of disputes and daily administration of the kingdom. The Oyo empire was so well organised and structured that there were constitutional checks on the powers of the Alaafin which include a constitutional process for the removal of the Alaafin if and when he lost the confidence of his subjects, he is presented with an empty calabash which signify his impeachment as the king over the kingdom with the expectation that he is to commit suicide.

The Oyomesi Council comes closely below the Alaafin. The Council consists of seven members which are the Bashorun who is the head of the council, the Agbakin, Shamu, Alapini, Laguna, Akiniku and Ashipa. The Oyomesi council acts as the legislature of the kingdom. The council deliberates on crucial matters affecting the society. They are also the king maker and acted in all respects as a check and balance to the Alaafin.

The Ogboni Cult of the Earth was next in importance in the local administration of the kingdom. The Ogboni cult was a powerful and dreaded association and was expected to use its power and authority to prevent any misuse of power by the Oyomesi particularly concerning the rejection or impeachment of an Alaafin. It was this position of check and balance that effectively controlled an ambitious Bashorun from usurping the power of the Alaafin. One of the tools used by the Ogboni cult was the Ifa oracle to consult the gods of the land. In fact, the Ogboni cult played the role of modern-day judiciary in the Oyo kingdom.

The last ruling figure was the army headed by the Are-Ona-Kakanfo. The army was not expected to dabble into political affairs, its sole duty was to expand and defend the empire against internal and external aggression. One of the unique features of the Oyo army was that, its leader, the Are-Ona-Kakanfo was not expected to suffer any defeat in the hands of the enemies. When such happens, he was expected to go into exile or commit suicide. Indeed, the Oyo Empire was a complex one taking into consideration every facet of government which reflects almost all the institutions of contemporary governance.

3.3 Pre-Colonial Administration in the Igbo Societies

The Igbo (Ibo) societies were republican in nature and often times regarded as a stateless state. In the first place, authority in Igbo land was not centralized but segmented and diffused. Power was not focused on one person but on councils and village assemblies, kingship groups or titled men (Ndichies), age set, and societies (women and youth) played considerable role in the governance of the society. Consequently, there were not individual traditional authorities which could rule over the people. The kingship groups presided over by the eldest male were the basic unit of deliberation, decision making, implementation and administration. Above all, the Igbo political system was based on the village assembly or councils. These assemblies or village councils were the highest authority organ of legislature and its decisions were supreme and binding. The age grades were part of the machinery for the implementation of the decision taken by the councils. The Igbo societies were not used to direct taxation and disputes were settled by the elders' council as there was absence of a king or central figure. The village head or the council membership were not hereditary or ascribed but through age and achievement.

3.4 Pre-Colonial Administration in the Benin Kingdom

The pre-colonial Benin Empire occupied the land to the South East of the Yoruba Kingdom, Ibo on the Eastern borders, Itsekiri and Ijaw lining the rivers in the South West. The kingdom adopted a monarchical system of government headed by the Oba (King). The political life of the people is centered on the Oba. The Oba's great strength is as a result of the people who perceived him as a semi-divine or the representative of the gods and the ancestors. The Oba ruled the kingdom with the help of the chiefs. The Obas were very skilled rulers who utilized the policy of division of labor. The Enigies, who were either the Oba's brothers or his sons, were in control of selected strategic villages. The various categories of chiefs have their functions and most of them occupied positions that were hereditary. The functions of the chiefs were so defined by the Oba that there was political stability in the kingdom. In the kingdom, there is the Uzama council of chiefs or Councilors of the state and king makers. The Uzama are the high rank chiefs of their kingdom and their titles are also hereditary. They are responsible for the coronation of a new Oba who in all times is the eldest son of the dying king. The Uzama Council occupied an advisory role to the Oba. Though the Uzama can crown the new king, but cannot reject a ruling king since no provision was made for this in the kingdom constitution (convention). The kingdom also maintains a large army headed by the Ologbosere. Finally, the Oba has the right to reward or decorate with honor any deserving sons and daughters of the land.

Compare and contrast the Uzama Council of the Benin Kingdom to the Local Government Councilors in modern day Nigeria

4.0 CONCLUSION

In the final analysis, it could be said that there existed a well-structured political and administrative system of governance in pre-colonial societies in Nigeria. The government and administrative system were fashioned to reflect the interests and aspirations of the societies in which they operated. One fundamental issue was that each society put in place its development and administrative system that advanced the society before the advent of the colonial era.

5.0 SUMMARY

In this unit, attempts have been made to expose the myth that the pre-colonial societies in Nigeria were primitive. We discussed the emirate councils with its clearly defined hierarchy and structure to suit the government in the North. The Oyo empire exhibits a complex political system that could be compared to contemporary democracies with all its various arms of government. Finally, we discussed the Igbo societies with its elements of democratic and republican nature.

6.0 TUTOR-MARKED ASSIGNMENT

Compare the Oyo system of government with contemporary democracy in Nigeria.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The advent of the colonial administration did not introduce the local government administration, but it rather strengthened and restructured it to meet with the administrative tenets of indirect rule. Though at rudimentary level, local government administration predates the advent of colonial administration. The colonial administration quickly took note of the well-established traditional institutions and the enormous powers of the traditional rulers and hence capitalized upon it to establish and rule through the indirect rule system.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to explain the local government administration during colonial era in the following regions of Nigeria:

- Northern
- Western
- Eastern
- Southern.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Local Government in the Northern Region of Nigeria in Colonial Era

In the North, the colonial administration represents a system of indirect rule administered through the traditional rulers or emirs. The colonialist explores the position of the traditional rulers or emirs for the implementation of colonial policies formulated in Britain. The emirate system in Northern Nigeria provided the needed platform for indirect rule to thrive; this is because of the well-established traditional system of administration which was highly centralized. Through this system the colonial administration had no direct dealings with the people, but with the emirs and traditional chiefs who provided the needed machinery of governance. In view of this, the indirect rule system through the native authorities achieved a great success in Northern Nigeria.

3.2 Local Government in Western Region of Nigeria in Colonial Era

Local government in the Western Nigeria during the colonial rule also took the form of indirect rule, the Obas and chiefs also presented the needed platform for the colonial native administration. The Obas and chiefs were also responsible for the daily administration of the people but they were only administering the colonial policies, which include the collection of taxes. However, the system was partially successful as the Obas and chiefs had no absolute control over the citizens. This was further compounded by the fact that almost every part of the region had its own Oba or chief, unlike the Northern region where the emirs were larger than life. Again, the west had religious multiplicity, i.e. the Christian faith and Islam, unlike the North where Islam was basically the major religion used as a unifying factor.

3.3 Government in Eastern Region of Nigeria in Colonial Era

In the east, an attempt was also made to rule through the chiefs and traditional rulers in order to maintain the principle of indirect rule, unfortunately, this was not possible due to the absence of a central figure as a traditional ruler. In other words, there was lack of a central authority or traditional institution. In order to cover this gap, the colonial administration introduced and appointed warrant chiefs for the purpose of local administration. The introduction of the warrant chiefs into a society that was basically republican sparked off a strong resistance from the people, who were not used to direct taxation introduced alongside the warrant chiefs. The situation was also compounded by the corrupt practices engaged upon by the warrant chiefs who perceived the position and privilege as an opportunity to enrich themselves. Therefore, local administration during the local era was a failure in the Eastern region of Nigeria. In fact part of the failure was the Aba women's riot of 1929.

3.4 Local Government in Southern Region of Nigeria in Colonial Era

The Southern region of Nigeria was divided and grouped under the Western region and Eastern region. In the pre-colonial era, these southern kingdoms of Benin, the Ijaws, Urhobos, Itsekiris, Ibibios, Kalabaris and the Efiks were grouped for administrative reasons under the Western and Eastern regions. The Benin kingdom, the Urhobos and Itsekiris were ground under the Western region while, the Ijaws were split between the Western and Eastern regions with the larger part under the Eastern region. The Ibibios, Efiks and Kalabaris were under the Eastern region during the colonial era. In the Eastern region local government administration were according to the dictates of the colonial masters which was the appointment of warrant officers in these riverine communities of Ijaws, Itsekiris, and Efiks. In the Benin, Urhobos and Itsekiris kingdoms, the policy of the indirect rule through the Oba and chiefs as in the central Yoruba kingdom of Western region also applied. The southern communities only follow the dictates and reacted according to the region in which they found themselves.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Differentiate between local government administration in Eastern and Southern regions during colonial era in Nigeria.

4.0 CONCLUSION

Local Government under colonial rule in Nigeria could be said to be an experiment at local administration. The administrative patterns were different in the three regions. In the North, it was successful based on an already well-established system of traditional institution; it was partially successful in the West because of the presence of a traditional institution who also had partial control over its citizens. The situation was completely different in the East due to lack of any established traditional institution, therefore, the system was a failure due to the citizens resistance to a system they perceived as alien.

5.0 SUMMARY

In this unit, we have examined local administration during the colonial era in Nigeria. We undertook a clear study of the administration in each region taking into consideration the importance of the traditional institutions in each region, the success, partial success and failures recorded in the four regions respectively.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The native administration introduced during the colonial era was at the verge of total collapse in the 1930s. Due to the varied degree of success in the regions which was not favorable for the smooth running of the country's administration, the colonial administration were of the opinion that the indirect rule system had to be gradually discontinued because it had outlived its usefulness. This was coupled by the stiff opposition that the system received from the nationalists, the people and other pressure groups. In view of this, it became apparent that the local administration needed to be reformed. The reform was necessitated by the need to make the system more effective, efficient, democratic, and responsive to encourage more local participations.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to describe the local government reforms in the 1950s in the following regions of Nigeria:

- Northern
- Western
- Eastern
- Southern.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Local Government in the 1950s in the Northern Region of Nigeria

In view of the significant success recorded in the north by the colonial administration during the indirect rule system. The agitation for reforms in local administration was at a slow pace. Unlike the Eastern and Western regions, the North refused to be rushed not only on the issue of democratization but also on making any drastic reform in the system of local government inherited from the colonial administrators. There was no significant reform in the North until 1954 through the enactment of the native law of 1954 which provided for democratic reforms. The first noticeable change was that abolition of sole native authorities, which was replaced with the Chiefs-in-Council and Chiefs-and-Council native authorities. In the Chief-in-Council, an Emir or Chief was obliged to consult with his Councilors in all decision making but could override the decision of the councilors. On the other hand, the Chief-and Council, the Emir would have to go along with the decision of the councilors. This was the situation in the North until 1960 when the country got its independence down to 1966, when the military intervene in Nigeria politics.

3.2 Local Government Reforms in the 1950s in the Western Region of Nigeria

The wave of local government reform also swept through the Western region in the early 1950s. One of the fundamental changes was the composition of local government councils. In the Western region, the passage of the local government law of 1952 transformed the system, so much so that, no sole native authority remained in the region. The new legislation introduced a three tier structure of divisional, district and local councils. In the reforms, councils were made up of elected and traditional rulers, with a minimum of three elected councilors for each traditional ruler. Furthermore, councils were regarded or classified either as Chiefs-in-Council or Chief-and-Council. The 1952 reform was replaced by the 1957 law, due to numerous problems encountered by the local councils, some of which bothers on lack of funds and trained staff. The major provisions of the 1957 law was the authority given to the councils to set up joint Boards for the operation of work or service, power to collect taxes and levy rates. Although, the 1957 did not bring about any fundamental improvement in the administration of the local councils, particularly in the improvement of socio-economic services, the expectation was that local authorities would enable people to have more equitable access to modern benefits. Such expectations never came and nothing was done to change the laws because by 1957 the agitations have reached its zenith.

3.3 Local Government Reform in the 1950s in the Eastern Region of Nigeria

In view of the fact that the indirect rule system was least successful in the East, the region was the first to flag off local government reforms. The local government ordinance of 1950 provided for remedies of the limitations of the native authority system. The reform was facilitated by the non-existence of centralized political system on which the native authority system was based. The 1950 law represented a clear break with the colonial tradition of native administration and was originated by African politicians working in harmony with a new post war generation of expatriate administrators. The law established three types of local government councils, that is, the county, urban or rural district and local councils, working independently. Each county comprised of six to ten district councils and each district had about ten councils. Each district council was designed to be the center of local government structure and each council was established by an instrument which defined its powers, functions and boundary. The tenure of members was three years. The ordinance provided for direct election to local councils and indirect election from local councils to the district and county councils. Generally, the councils had power to make standing rules and to appoint and dismiss its own staff. However, the regional government could withdraw powers conferred on a council if found wanting and had power to approve all bye-laws, annual estimate and loans. In addition, the Eastern regional government went further in 1955 to enact a local government law as a replacement to the 1950 ordinance in order to improve on the local government administration. The law laid down the local government areas, their internal divisions or wards, the number of Councilors to be appointed or elected or a mixture of the two. Again, this was the status quo before independence in 1960 and the military intervention in 1966.

3.4 Local Government Reform in 1950 in Southern Region of Nigeria

The Southern communities or kingdoms of Nigeria which consist of the Benin Kingdom, the Urhobo, Itsekiri, Ibibios, Ijaws and Efiks could not really make any reform because of their minority status. Their major problem was that they were divided between the Western and Eastern region. Therefore, reforms in any of the region affected them based on the region they belong to geographically. For example, reforms could affect the Ijaws from the Eastern region differently from the Ijaws in the Western region.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss the main features of the 1950s local government reforms in Eastern and Southern regions of Nigeria

4.0 CONCLUSION

Local government administration improved from just being a mere native administration to democratic system. The reforms of the 1950s were drastic innovations in the local government system of administration. From that point on, the space of governance began to expand, particularly in the east and western regions where the system of indirect rule met stiff and little oppositions. The reforms also created greater opportunities for more people to participate in their own administration, particularly, the Councilors who were elected.

5.0 SUMMARY

In this unit, we have examined the regional local government reforms of the 1950s in Nigeria. We have learnt that the reform was slow to come in the North, moderate in the Western region and drastic and radical in the Eastern region. The reforms were a turning point in native authority administration in Nigeria. It also created the platform for the future of modern local government in Nigeria.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The local government structure and administration in Nigeria took a different turn during the General Murtala Mohammed/General Olusegun Obasanjo military regime of 1975-1979. The regime was the most fundamental in terms of local government reforms that makes the 1976 local government reform in Nigeria a reference point in local government administration in Nigeria. The administration was clear in making local government a third tier of government in Nigeria. The regime came out with what it called “Guidelines for local government reform Federal Republic of Nigeria, 1976”. The intention of the regime was to stabilise and rationalise government at the local level. The regime reform remained the most radical transformation of the local government system in Nigeria.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- discuss the standardisation of local government administration in Nigeria
- appreciate local government as third tier of government
- appreciate the establishment of Local Government Service Board
- discuss recognition of traditional institutions
- appreciate the establishment of Police/Community Relations Committee

- discuss the establishment of Local Government Peace and Security Committee.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 The Standardization of Local Government

The 1976 local government reforms in Nigeria marks a point of departure from the colonial and post-colonial local government administration. It elevated the local government council to the third tier administration in Nigeria. The reforms made an attempt to correct the defects of the previous local government system in Nigeria and for the first time in the history of local government, we had a document that provided guidelines for the creation of uniform local government in all the states of the federation. One of the major reasons for the 1976 reforms was the persistent instability that characterized Nigeria local government. It was believed that the standardization of the basic structure, functions and powers of local government by the reforms would minimize the problem of instability. The reform spelt out in specific terms the mission of local government as follows; to make appropriate services and development activities responsive to local wishes and initiatives by devolving and delegating them to local government representative bodies; to facilitate the exercise of democratic self-government close to the grassroots of our society and to encourage initiative and leadership potentials; mobilisation of human material resources through the involvement of members of public in their local development; to provide a two way channel of communication between local communities and government (both state and federal).

3.2 Local Government as Third Tier of Government

The special features of the 1976 reforms include among others, local government as a third tier of government; multi-purpose single tier structure; elected local government councils, a unified local government service to be established by each state through the local government service board; each local government area is to have a population of between 150,000 and 800,000, but no town should be spilt no matter its population; 10% statutory allocation to all local councils from the federation account; recognition of traditional council in each local government and a police committee for each local government. With these, local government administration occupies a prominent place in governance in Nigeria. The 1976 reform remains a point of departure for local government administration in Nigeria.

3.3 Establishment of Local Government Service Board

The 1976 reform empower the various state governments to set up a local government service board to perform personnel management functions as it relates to recruitment, posting, promotion and discipline of all members of staff of the councils. The Board is basically to perform the same kind of functions like the state civil service commission and it is to harmonize salaries, pension, gratuities and other benefits with that of the state civil servant. It is perceived that with the harmonization of these conditions of service with that of the state and federal the sound development civil servants, local government will attract the needed professional and competent personnel for the sound development of local government as a third-tier of government.

3.4 Recognition of Traditional Institutions

The 1976 reform gives statutory recognition to the traditional institutions by setting up traditional council in each local government of the federation. The council is composed of traditional rulers and representative of the council. The council is charged to act as advisory body to the local government; coordinate development plans of the local government by joint discussion and advice; community tax assessment and collection in the area; and control of chieftaincy matters.

3.5 Establishment of Police/Community Relations Committee

The 1976 local government reform also made provision for the establishment of police-community relations in each local government with the sole purpose of enforcing local government laws and maintaining law and order. The Composition is as follows:

- i. Local Government Chairman
- Chairman
- ii. Vice Chairman of the local government
- Member
- iii. President of the emirate/traditional council or his representative
- Member
- iv. The most senior police officer in the local government area
- Member
- v. One representative of the Christian association of Nigeria
- Member
- vi. One representative of the Muslim organisation
- Member
- vii. President of the Hotelier association
- Member
- viii. President of Market association

- Member
- ix. One representative of the non-indigenes association
 - Member
- x. Two community leaders
 - Members
- xi. Secretary to the local government
 - Secretary

The main functions of the committee are as follows:

- i. To regularly assess the performance of the police force in their task of maintenance of law and order.
- ii. To suggest areas of improvement to the police and to assist in achieving closer rapport with the police force.
- iii. To serve as avenue for providing useful information to the police and to improve the image of the police in the public.

3.6 Establishment of Local Government Peace and Security Committee

The 1976 reform also made provision for the establishment of the peace and security committee for the sole aim of maintaining peace and security in the local government. The Composition of the committee is as follows:

- Chairman of the local government Chairman
- One representative of the Nigeria Police force (DPO) Deputy Chairman
- Secretary to the local government Secretary
- One representative of the state security service Member
- One representative of the Army unit (where applicable)
- One representative of the Naval Unit (where applicable)
- One representative of the Air Force Unit (where applicable)
- The most senior traditional ruler in the local Government area or his representative Member
- Two community leaders one of whom shall be a non-indigene of the local government area Member
- Two religious leaders appointed by the local Government chairman Member
- One representative of women organisations (where applicable)

The committee's main functions shall include the following:

- The committee shall meet regularly and its input will be readily available to the meetings of the state security committee.
- It shall review the security situation in the local government area and offer suggestions to arrest unpleasant situations or avert similar occurrences in the future.

- It shall assess the reactions of the people on government policies and programmes with a view to offering suggestions for modifications, etc.
- It shall take stock of immigrant to ensure that they have valid entry papers and to ensure that they do not constitute themselves into nuisance or security risks etc.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Examine the functions of the traditional rulers in the 1976 reforms

4.0 CONCLUSION

The 1976 Mohammed/Obasanjo Local Government Reforms laid a solid foundation for local government administration in Nigeria. The regime was committed to making local government councils a spring board for democratic transitions. Most of the features of the 1976 Local Government Reforms were reflected in the 1979 constitution of Nigeria which ushered in the Alhaji Shehu Shagari civilian administration. The 1976 reform still remain the most comprehensive Local Government Reforms in Nigeria.

5.0 SUMMARY

We have examined the major features of the 1976 Local Government Reform. The Reforms changed the face and direction of local government administration in Nigeria and have transformed and entrenched Local Government as a third tier of government in the Nigerian constitution up to this moment.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Autonomy from literal perspective means the right to explore and exploit ones freedom without interference or intervention from anybody or quarters. In respect to local government, autonomy implies the capacity of third tier of government to use its powers and privileges as enshrined in the constitution. Undeniably, autonomy has been a major challenge to administration of local government in Nigeria because interference and sometimes outright usurpation of its powers by both federal and state government. However, 1976 local reform decree has entrenched an appreciable improvement in this regard by allocating more functions and powers to the system in the bid to strengthen it and ultimately make it an independent unit of government.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- explain the meaning of Local Government Autonomy in Nigeria
- discuss Local Government Autonomy and Fiscal policies in Nigeria
- explain Institutional Dependency of Local Government in Nigeria.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 The Meaning of Local Government Autonomy

Local Government is a political authority that is created by the law or constitution vested with substantial powers to manage public affairs within a defined jurisdiction. The above implies that local government commands powers that should be enjoyed without being controlled by higher authority. Hence the need for autonomy which literally means freedom to explore and exploit one's powers. Autonomy has been a source of agitation or struggle since the creation of local government in Nigeria. Undeniably, there has been improvement in the degree of autonomy granted to the local government by the federal government since 1976, with more functions given to it. To strengthen the philosophy of the local government, the federal government went further to entrench the local government in the constitution of 1979, section 7 paragraph 1 as amended.

3.2 Local Government Autonomy and Fiscal Policies

Public revenue generation and expenditure is one of the most keenly contested issues in Nigeria. Local Government in Nigeria receives statutory allocations from revenue mobilisation, allocation and fiscal commission established in 1988. Currently local governments receive 20.6 percent from the federation account. They are also entitled to 10 percent of states internally generated revenue and percentage of Value Added Tax (VAT). Local Government taxes are minimal. Hence this limits their ability to raise independent revenue and so they depend mainly on allocations from the federation account and their own statutory share of state government internally generated revenue. Revenue from the internal sources of local government amounts to a less than significant portion of the local government total recurrent expenditure. Further the inability of local governments to raise substantial portion of their total recurrent expenditure requirements from internal sources have become common knowledge. Reasons for this have ranged from the very narrow revenue base imposed on the local government by the statutory distribution of tax power, corruption to the constant interference on their revenue rights by the state governments in particular. The above clearly indicate the level of imbalance in Nigeria's fiscal federalism and lack of autonomy on the part of local government. The implication is that local government lack adequate revenue generation powers, and by extension expenditure powers because of the tax administrations. Financial autonomy of local government in Nigeria still remains a dream. The Local Government system has lost its relevance in the developmental process as a result of undue interference in the administration, finance and operations by the state governments. This is based on the fact that the local government system in Nigeria has become an appendage of the state government due to the weakness of the political institutions of the state government that has not allowed the local government to operate as the third-tier of government in Nigeria.

3.3 INSTITUTIONAL DEPENDENCY OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT IN NIGERIA

Local government under the present dispensation is confronted with the problem of institutional dependency. Therefore, the existence of local government is a mere administrative expression of the state government. Hence, local governments in Nigeria have for long remained subordinate to the state government. Thus, state exerts profound influence over the structure and functions of local government in Nigeria. 1999 constitution entrusts power on the state legislative to enact a law establishing the structure, composition, powers and functions of local government. Therefore, the state through its legislative arm exerts enormous influence on the roles and process of local government, thereby making it to be dependent. Local Government Reform 1976 provided for the establishment of local government service commission to supervise and monitor staff roles and activities of local governments. Similarly, state assemblies enacted laws establishing local government. Service commission plays the same roles with their federal counterparts. The influence of state chief executives in the management and activities of local governments is one of the factors militating against the autonomy of local government in Nigeria.

This is evidenced in the incessant instances of arbitrary dissolution of local government councils.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Explain the term Local Government Autonomy.

4.0 CONCLUSION

The struggle for autonomy at the local government level is aimed at restricting and repositioning local government system. In recent times, the federal government changed its posture and championed the course of local government autonomy. To improve financial autonomy, the federal government initiated direct disbursement of funds to local government, thus preventing the hijacking of the funds of local government by the state governments. In a similar view, the federal government increased the statutory allocation to local governments from 10% to 15% in 1990 and from 15%-20% in 1992.

5.0 SUMMARY

This unit dwelt extensively on the clamor for autonomy for local government. The meaning of autonomy, factors militating realization of autonomy of local government system, forms dependency that affect the system, and financial autonomy. Undue interference by states has disadvantaged the Local Government system and rendered it incapable of solving the problems at the local populace as envisaged by the proponents by the Local Government administration.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Local Government was created by the constitution to enjoy quasi-autonomy as a political unit. Hence this unit will examine the basic political functions of Local Government in Nigeria: Facilitation of Local Political Participation, enhancement of political autonomy, legislative and executive functions of Local Government.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- discuss the facilitation of local political participation
- explain the facilitation of political autonomy to suit local conditions
- identify legislative functions of local government
- discuss executive functions of local government.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 The Facilitation of Local Political Participation

Generally, local government is said to perform political functions by facilitating the process of political participation at the local level and by bringing government closer to the people at the grassroots. The peculiar nature of local government distinguished it from other levels of government because of all the structures of government that is also present at the local level. Local government permits the local people the opportunity to have a choice and a say in decision making. Due to the fact that the system provides for election of local representatives in the administration of local affairs, political accountability can be assured.

3.2 The Facilitation of Political Autonomy to Suit Local Conditions

The local government also has the political autonomy to adjust governmental programmes to suit local conditions and initiatives. The political autonomy of local government also permits the generation of local inputs into the nation's polity. The local government has executive political powers to formulate policies and programmes for the good governance of the council. It also exhibits legislative powers by making edits and bye-laws for local jurisdictions for the maintenance of peace, order and good government of the localities. The political aspects of local government have improved the advancement of the people over time in terms of political education and enlightenment. However, the political autonomy of local government can sometimes be undermined by the perception and use of political powers by the central ruling elites. Sometimes, it is perceived that the local government has become too political so that the central and local arenas of political activities are merged so that the ruling elites in power at the central government can easily utilize the instruments of local government to enhance their own positions at the central level. It is apparent to state that the local government is an essential aspect of representative government in a democracy. Therefore, the political functions of local government as a unit of government cannot be over emphasized.

3.3 Legislative Functions of Local Government

In addition to any other powers that may be conferred on it by law, the local government council also performs the following legislative functions:

- a. Debating, approving or amending the annual budget of the local government council subject to the chairman veto which may be set aside by two thirds majority of the members of the local government council.
- b. Vetting and monitoring the implementation of projects and programmes in the annual budget of the local government.
- c. Examining and debating the monthly statement of income and expenditure rendered by the chairman of local government.
- d. Advising, consulting and liaising with the chairman of the local government, and,
- e. Performing such other functions as may be assigned to it from time to time, by an edict or law of the state in which it is situated.

The legislative powers vested in the local government council shall be exercised by bye-law duly passed by the local government council. To become effective, such bye-laws must receive the assent of the chairman of the local government. The chairman may withhold his assent in exercise of his power of veto. If the bye-law is passed again by the local government council by two thirds majority of the members of the councils in such cases, the bye-laws shall become effective and the assent of the chairman of the local government shall not be required in respect of such a bye-law.

The local government council shall before approval of any project ensure that the project is desirable and likely to facilitate the meaningful development of the local government area. It shall ensure that adequate provisions have been made for the execution of each project such that it is not likely to be abandoned and that development projects are not unduly concentrated in any particular section of the local government area.

Once a project is approved and has received the assent of the Chairman of the local government, the vetting and monitoring role of the council shall be restricted to the following:

- a. Carrying out on the spot inspection of the projects contained in the approved budgets to ensure that the projects are being implemented as approved. This shall involve periodic inspection visits to each project by members of the relevant committee of the local government council.

- b. Comparing situation on the ground with contents of the monthly reports rendered to the local government council by the Chairman of the local government and
- c. Summoning by means of a motion the local government Chairman or any other relevant official of the executive arm of the local government to the council to explain any observed discrepancies.

Finally, the legislative arm also has the responsibility of impeaching the Chairman or Vice-Chairman. A Chairman or Vice-Chairman of local government, who is found guilty of gross misconduct within the context of the existing laws of the federation, could be impeached by the local government council. Impeachment is an instrument of last resort designed to enhance public probity and accountability and shall not be employed frivolously, selfishly or as a tool for personal vendetta or political victimization.

3.4 Executive Functions of Local Government

The executive functions of the local government rest on the chairman and his administrative staff. The chairman of each local government shall be the chief executive and accounting officer of the local government provided his role as accounting officer shall exclude signing vouchers and cheques. For the avoidance of doubt, vouchers and cheque shall be signed by the head of the personnel management department and the treasurer to the local government. The chairman as the chief executive and accounting officer shall perform the following functions:

- i. He/she shall observe and comply fully with the checks and balances spelt out in the existing guidelines and financial regulations governing receipts.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss how local government creates avenues for political participation at the grassroots.

4.0 CONCLUSION

Most nations have adopted what can be described as grassroots-oriented tier of government. This is aimed at encouraging rural dwellers to participate actively and contribute immensely in politics in general and governance in particular. This tier of government has relieved both federal and state of many responsibilities and addressed the critical needs of the local population.

5.0 SUMMARY

This unit dwelt extensively on political functions of local government in Nigeria. It also examined how legislative and executive functions of local government have enhanced or hampered the autonomy of local government system in Nigeria. It is a platform that is to domesticate policies and programmes of government in rural areas. Attempts have been made to streamline the political functions of local government from other functions. It has been exposed that local government generate political activities and encourage popular participation at the local levels. It gives the people at the local level a feeling of belongingness in the nation's policy.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Local Government as Administrative Unit

The position of the local government in the administrative hierarchy of government is one of the major reasons for setting up local government to perform certain administrative functions which are peculiar to local communities and which the state or local government might not be able to perform effectively and efficiently. This is what gives the local government its distinctive character as a level of government. These administrative functions are recognized as part of the provisions of the constitution. Local government performs administrative functions especially as part of the administrative decentralisation of the nation's government. As third-tier of the government, the local government has its own administrative structure such as the executive, legislature and of course the customary courts which acts as part of the judiciary. The attraction of local government as administrative unit is predicated on the fact that the local government is close to the local problems and it is supposed to be better placed to mobilised and manage local resources to meet such problems than the central state government and its agencies.

3.2 Decongestion of State Administrative Machinery

The administrative functions of local government also include the day-to-day running of the local councils. It involves those functions which required detailed local knowledge for efficient performance, those functions in which success depends on community's responsiveness and participation, those functions which are of personal nature requiring provision close to where the individual's lives is affected and; in which significant use of discretion or understanding of individual is needed. Fundamentally, the administrative functions of local government decongest the administrative burden of the state and federal levels of government.

does not exist in the local government service.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Enumerate the main functions of the local government Treasurer.

4.0 CONCLUSION

The focus of this unit is to expose students to basic functions of local government in Nigeria. This will make students to understand the distinction between the third tier and other tiers of government.

5.0 SUMMARY

We have attempted to discuss the local government as an administrative unit. The Unit exposed the fact that the local government as a third-tier of government has been able to decongest the state and federal levels in terms of administrative burdens. This is also strengthened by the fact that the local government is the first port of call by the people. Again, with the wave of democracy, administration is no longer centralized in one man or authority, therefore, the local government readily comes in governmental decentralisation.

6.0 TUTOR-MARKED ASSIGNMENT

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Government which is the ruling machinery of the state is charged by constitution to solve major problems that militate against the comfort of the citizens. The aim, roles of tiers, organs, structure and parasatals of government are systemic in their bid to improve the living standard of the people. The achievement of the above goal requires participation of the people both in resource mobilisations and project executions.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- discuss resource mobilisations
- explain project executions.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Participation in Resource Mobilisation

One of the major functions of local government is the socio-economic and developmental duties that it performs. Local government is the link for resource mobilisation for developmental activities. Without the local government administration, there will be a big gap or de-link between the people and the state and central government. The local government has opened the space for local communities to be involved in socio- economic development as it affects their everyday lives. Such programmes as the community banks, cooperative societies, micro-credit finance, and community health care development, amongst others, have gone a long way to improve the living standard of local communities. These are projects the local communities can easily associate with and thereby easy to mobilise local resources for their implementations.

3.2 Participation in Projects Executions

Some local government councils have even undertaken such projects as inter-states and inter-cities transport system and in the riverine areas, they have been able to establish water transportation system. Some local government councils have undertaken to rehabilitate state and federal roads neglected for a long time for the benefits of the local communities, and in order to facilitate economic activities in the area. The local government, as a unit of government, has been able to reduce rural-urban migration due to its socio-economic activities. However, this progress is sometimes hindered by unfavorable government policies which tend to put the local government in check. Again, these activities can also be hampered where there is a bad chief executive at the local government level.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss how your local government has been able to mobilise resources for economic development.

4.0 CONCLUSION

In socio-economic development of Nigeria, Local Government System plays pivotal roles. The system by virtue of being close to the people, it aggregates and articulates the problems of the people. The system clearly identified those at the grassroots as core stakeholders in resource mobilisation and project execution.

5.0 SUMMARY

This unit extensively explained economic and developmental functions of Local Governments in Nigeria. Local Government is used by state and federal governments to domesticate their strategic programmes at grassroots level.

6.0 TUTOR-MARKED ASSIGNMENT

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The proximity of local government to the people placed it on a vantage position to understand the problems of the people, strategies for solving them and mechanism for generating feedback from them. Exclusive functions, Uniqueness of the Local Government, Unified Local Government System and Organisation structure constitute the focus of this unit.

- discuss the uniqueness of local government
- express the unified local government system
- organisation structure of the local government.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Constitutional Provision on Exclusive Functions

The Fourth Schedule of the 1999 constitution of Nigeria gives the exclusive functions of the local government as follows: Collection of rates, radio and television licenses; establishment and maintenance of cemeteries, burial grounds and homes for destitute or infirm, licensing of bicycles, trucks, canoes, wheel barrows and cars; establishment, maintenance and regulation of slaughter houses, markets, motor parks,

3.2 Uniqueness of the Local Government

The uniqueness of the local government can easily be deduced from the performance of the exclusive functions. These are the most important functions of local government that have serious implications on the administration, the people, and the environment which is constitutionally required of every local government councils. The ability to perform these functions is part of the criteria for the creation of local government councils.

3.3 Unified Local Government System

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Differentiate the uniqueness of the local government from the other levels of government

4.0 CONCLUSION

The exclusive functions of local government as guaranteed by the 1999 constitution reveal the importance of local government as a unit of government. It is these exclusive functions which the local government alone can perform with much effectiveness and efficiency that gives it its uniqueness as a third-tier of government. It is these exclusive functions that explain the purposeful roles of local government in national development.

5.0 SUMMARY

This unit brought to limelight those functions of local government regarded as exclusive. It is also these exclusive functions that the citizens at the local communities can easily identify and for which the local governments are held responsible.

6.0 TUTOR-MARKED ASSIGNMENT

Discuss the importance of the exclusive functions of local government.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

This unit will examine all those functions of government which are jointly undertaken by Local Governments and State/Federal Governments. The premise of concurrent functions is that it leads to better and rapid service delivery. These functions are guaranteed by the fourth schedule of the 1999 constitution.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- identify concurrent functions of local government in Nigeria
- discuss delegated functions of local government in Nigeria.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Concurrent Functions of Local Government in Nigeria

In a federal system of government, powers are shared between the central and federating units and Nigeria federalism has three-tier of government where the local government is the third-tier. In this arrangement certain powers and functions are devolved to the lower tiers for the good governance of the country. These powers and functions are usually guaranteed by the constitution. The 1999 Constitution of Nigeria provides for local government concurrent list as follows; the provision and maintenance of primary, adult and vocational education; the provision and maintenance of health services; the development of agriculture and natural resources other than the exploitation of minerals; and such other functions as may be conferred on local government by an act of the National Assembly.

3.2 Delegated Functions of Local Government in Nigeria

These are functions that are delegated by the House of Assembly of the State to local government councils and it include such functions as housing and industrial estate, using local government structures for electoral purposes, immunisation and distribution of essential commodities, using the local government as a basic yardstick for quota and federal character allocation of resources and positions. These are all part of the covert functions of local government councils.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Differentiate between concurrent and delegated functions of local government

4.0 CONCLUSION

The place of local government in Nigeria is indispensable because of ever increasing demands of citizens. It is obvious that both Federal and State Governments can no longer cope with the space and challenges of governance, hence the need for this level of governance as the closest to the local population, for efficient and speedy service delivery.

5.0 SUMMARY

In this unit, we have enumerated the concurrent and delegated functions of local governments which they perform jointly or separately with the state and federal governments. We also noted that these functions actually share the burden of governance with other tiers of government.

6.0 TUTOR-MARKED ASSIGNMENT

Discuss the importance of the local government in the performance of concurrent and delegated functions.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Local Government in Nigeria just like any other Government institution is confronted with a number of problems and challenges. These problems and challenges influence and sometimes hamper the effective and efficient performance in the discharge of its functions. Local Government over the years has been facing a lot of problems which have militated against its ability to function optimally and to actually develop as a strong tier of Government. Okechukwu, M. I et al., (2020) identified one of the major problems of the Local Government as interference by state government.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- discuss local party rivalries
- explain Political rivalries between state and local government
- discuss the frequent reforms
- explain frequent interference by state and federal governments.

3.0 Main Content

3.1 Local political Rivalries

One of the major problems of local government is political problems, which bother on the fact that local government is regarded as a training field for political participation. Therefore, local government is regarded as a guinea pig for politicians. There is also the problem of sharing of key political posts such as the chairman, Councilors and supervisory Councilors. Politics at the local government is highly tempestuous, which involves a lot of victimization and discrimination. Rather than pull resources together for the advantage of the community, energy is dissipated on minor irrelevancies such as interpersonal rivalries, party differences, god fatherism, and location of ward and local government headquarters. There is also the problem of rivalries between the executive and the legislative arm of the local government. In such situations, the Chairman of the Local Government feels a sense of supremacy over the Councilors and therefore undermines the power of the Councilors. This normally creates a lot of rift to the extent that each Councilor and the Chairman appeal to the sentiments of their people thereby causing serious problems at the grassroots.

3.2 Political Rivalries between State and Local

Another dimension of political problem at the local government is that which might result between the local government authorities and the state government, particularly when they subscribed to different political ideology or party. The state government is likely to discriminate against that particular local government in political appointment and revenue sharing or allocation. This might result in a lot of discontentment in the local government concerned. That particular local government at the end might be apolitical to the policies and programmes of the state government. Political problem could also emanate from the siting of projects and distribution of amenities to favor a particular Local Government against others especially where those local governments are not in the good books of the state government. Political problems and challenges have a way of degenerating into other problems, which could have multiplier effects and thereby slow down the pace of development in the local government.

3.3 Frequent Political Reforms

Another dimension of political problem is the issue of frequent reforms of the local government. Successive regimes over the years reform the local government to suit their regimes. For instance, the Federal Government at various times have abolished the Local Government Councils and changed the leadership, issued guidelines and decrees amending laws and imposed extra-budgetary expenses. It is important to state that political stability at the local government is a necessary condition for even development at the grassroots. Therefore, political problems at the local government level must be kept at the barest minimum.

3.4 Frequent Interference by State and Federal Governments

The local government as the smallest unit of government is exposed to frequent interference by the state and federal governments. Although the local government is said to have political autonomy, such autonomy is often times infringed upon through policy direction and policy changes from the state and federal government. There have been cases where the local government council has been dissolved by the state government and in other cases the tenure of office of local government council has been reduced by the state government. Under military regimes, local government officials have no fixed tenure of office. Their tenure of office was to the whips and caprices of the State Governor or Military Administrator (MILAD). Under the civilian regime, the constitution places the local government under the direction of the state, particularly as it relates to electoral matters. Therefore, the state electoral bodies have at different times changed the tenure of office of the local government elected officers. In all of these, the local government autonomy is often times challenged.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Examine the effect of frequent political reforms on the administration of local government

4.0 CONCLUSION

The political problems of local government stem from the fact that local government does not have absolute political autonomy. It is therefore, subject to the whips and caprices of the upper levels of government that is, the federal and state.

5.0 SUMMARY

In this unit, we have attempted to discuss the political problems of local government, which include interpersonal rivalries, party and ideological differences, god fatherism, lack of absolute political autonomy, interference or frequent reforms of the local government by the central government, imposition or change of leadership, location of wards and local government council headquarters and political wrangling between the state and local governments.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Every local government has its own socio-economic problems which is part of their daily existence. The basic reasons for the creation of local government are to solve the socio-economic problems that affect the people particularly at the local communities. If the principle of good governance is well practiced, at the local government level, then, the socio-economic lives of the people are supposed to be affected positively. The notion of even-development is for harmonious and equitable utilization of resources for the enhancement of the socio-economic lives of the people. However, the socio-economic problems faced by local government have deprived the people these even-developments.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- explain lack of developed human capacity
- discuss lack of infrastructure
- explain issues of socio- cultural beliefs
- determine friction with traditional institutions
- examine corruption among staff.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Lack of developed Human Capacity

One of the major socio-economic problems facing local governments in Nigeria is lack of developed human capacity. Local government lacks the technical and professional staff that could contribute meaningfully to the social development of the people. The professional and technical staff does not perceive the local government as a place to fully actualize and develop their career as those of their counterparts at the federal or state levels. This is further compounded by the fact that employment at the local level is not based on merit but rather on patronage such as appeals to ethnicity, political consideration, quota system, allegiance to political godfatherism, and other primordial factors. The effect of this is poor service delivery.

3.2 Lack of Infrastructure

Another major problem is lack of social amenities and infrastructure, which greatly affect the economic development of these local governments. Local government suffers more in terms of poor roads, electricity, portable water, medical and healthcare facilities, poor educational facilities and transportation. The absence of these social amenities does not attract economic investors to the local government areas and the result is that most local governments are not economically viable. They only depend on the statutory allocations from the federal and state governments. Again, the absence of these social amenities results in high prevalence of sicknesses and diseases, which often times, the local governments are not able to handle due to poor healthcare facilities or infrastructure.

3.3 Issues of Socio-Cultural Beliefs

Another socio-economic problem of the Local Government is the socio-cultural beliefs. There are certain cultural beliefs that inhibit development in some local government areas. There are certain places in some local government areas that are regarded as sacred and therefore, certain projects cannot be sited or located in such areas even if it is perceived to bring about development. There is also the issue of cultural biases and sentimental attachment to preserve the culture of the communities.

3.4 Friction with Traditional Institutions

One of the major problems of local government is how to contain the powers of traditional institutions. It must be noted that the evolution of local government took its roots from the traditional institutions who oversee the governance of the local communities. Contemporary governance and emerging democracies have reduced the powers and influence of these traditional institutions which have resulted in a lot of friction between them and the elected local government officials. The traditional institutions are not too comfortable with the loss of power. As a result, there is competition for the citizen's attention and allegiance. While some citizens subscribe to the local government council, others subscribe to the traditional institutions because of the closeness to the traditional institutions. In some cases, the traditional rulers are so powerful and influential that officials of the local government pay obeisance to them, others solicit their support to stand for local government elections. However, an attempt to reduce these frictions has made the state and federal government to recognize these traditional institutions through the various states council of chiefs and traditional rulers.

3.5 Corruption among Staff

Economic corruption has been elevated to a very high status even at the local government level in Nigeria. It has been argued that the local government officials have often times perceived the allocation to the council as their personal fund and share of the national cake, and have therefore, restricted themselves to paying salaries of staff and do away with the rest. Accountability is very poor at the local government level. This is coupled with the fact that the local government staff perceives their services to the people as personal service rather than as government services to the public. Therefore, they often times use their official capacity to extort money from the public. The local government council, like the state and federal governments has become one haven of official and economic corruption.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Examine corruption on a major problem in the administration of the local government

4.0 CONCLUSION

Local governments are everyday engaged in an attempt to solve the socio-economic problems of their localities. This is because the survival and the acceptance of the local government depend on the ability of the local councils to solve the socio-economic problems that confront the local communities. Some members of the communities might not be directly affected by the political issues of the local government, but every citizen is affected by the problem resulting from socio-economic angle. Therefore, local government administration must take seriously the issues involved in socio-economic problems of local government.

5.0 SUMMARY

In this unit, we have discussed the socio-economic issues and problems that affect every citizen of the Local Government. This is because the issues involved are those that affect the standard of living of every citizen. The issues of healthcare, education, water, sanitation, human capacity development, transport, economic investment are problems that one is confronted with on a daily basis.

6.0 TUTOR-MARKED ASSIGNMENT

Briefly examine those socio-economic problems that can affect the growth and development of Local Governments in Nigeria.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

One of the major justifications for the creation of local government is for developmental reasons. Proponents of local government have argued that the state and federal governments cannot effectively carry out all the developmental projects without the involvement of local government. Here, local government becomes a catalyst for developmental projects, particularly as it relate to the principle of even development. It is also perceived that the local government is in a better position to harness all the local ingredients and local content for developmental purposes. However, this has not been the case, as most developmental programmes at the local government are besieged with a lot of problems. These problems incapacitate the development of local government and hindered it from its initial justification of providing the needed social and developmental amenities for the local communities. The resultant effect is that the Local government system becomes moribund in performing its duties.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- explain over fragmentation of the Nation into Local councils
- discuss frequent change of government
- explain absence of local Contents and inputs
- discuss ineffective public support.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Over Fragmentation of the Nation into Local Councils

One of the major developmental problems of local government results from over fragmentation of the nation into local government councils. The effect of this is that local governments, in essence, are too small and too weak to muster high developmental projects that can affect the lives of the people positively. Therefore, local government undertake only little and small development projects that do not have a significant effect on the lives of the people. Again, there is the issue of the other levels of governments, state and federal putting too heavy burden of projects on the local government. Often times, these projects outweigh the available capacity of the local government system. The resultant effect is that there are lots of abandoned projects all over the place. This is further exacerbated by the fact that local government lacks the high technological base and personnel to undertake some of these developmental projects. The “bottom-up” approach to development which is supposed to encourage and initiate development from the grassroots is on the reverse. Instead, what we have is “up-bottom” approach where the decision on developmental projects are made and forced down on the people who often times do not understand the essence and the technology involved in implementing such projects.

3.2 Frequent Change of Government Developmental Policies

Another major problem to development of local governments is the frequent change of government and government policies. This was so frequent during the military era that the people did not believe in any developmental projects by local governments. There were cases where a Sole Administrator was appointed today and sacked the next day. Government projects were basically on paper and most of them were white elephant projects. In situations where there is frequent change of government, there is always lack of continuity of government programmes and policies which affects the continuity of development projects. In a situation where the incoming administration do not believe in the capability of the outgoing either in the personality or ideology, the on-going projects often times are reviewed or discontinued.

3.3 Absence of Local Contents and Inputs

The low participation of the people particularly in the formulation and implementation of these developmental projects is another area of concern. From past evidence, local government officials formulate, prepare estimates and carry out the implementation of projects without consultation with the people to know their needs, problems and challenges that they are facing in the community. There have been cases where the people are in need of portable water; instead they were given recreational centers. This is further worsen by the fact that, there is often times the absence of local content and inputs in developmental projects, particularly where the federal or state government wish is to come to the aid of local government in their development agenda. These projects are sometimes allocated and located indiscriminately using undemocratic criteria that are unprogressive to the people. The implication of this is that projects are foist on local government without their knowledge and contribution to such projects and as such cannot maintain such projects. Development becomes disarticulated, uncoordinated and therefore failed to meet the expectations of the people.

3.4 Ineffective Public Support

Another problem of the local government is that of lack of public support for local government developmental activities and projects embarks upon by the local government. The public sometimes perceived these developmental activities and projects as an avenue for the local government officials to enrich themselves and their close associates, therefore the necessary public support needed for such projects and developmental activities are lacking. This is evident from the number of abandoned projects and developmental activities found in the various local government areas. And because they lack public support, the projects are often times criticize before its take off stage. It is important to emphasize that public support is very necessary in the execution of developmental projects.

SELF-ASSIGNMENT EXCERCISE

Examine how lack of local contents and inputs affects the development of local government.

4.0 CONCLUSION

Only very few government institutions have gone through frequent changes as the local government. These frequent changes and reforms have also had negative effects on the developmental projects of the local government. The whole essence of local is to give development to the people. Development promotes unity among the people and by extension improves the living standard of the people.

When the local communities are involved in developmental projects, it become easier to mobilise resources, incorporate local content and inputs which the people can easily identified with.

5.0 SUMMARY

In this unit, we have discussed some of the drawbacks that can affect developmental issues in local government. We have exposed the fact that some of these developmental projects are exogenous and are not supported by the local communities. There is also the problem of over burden of projects on the local government and are therefore, not able to carry the project to its conclusion. This account for several abandoned projects that littered all the local government areas.

7.0 TUTOR-MARKED ASSIGNMENT

Discuss the problems that can hinder development at the Local Government in Nigeria.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The importance of finance in any human endeavor cannot be over emphasized. The success or failure and the effectiveness or ineffectiveness of local government depends on the financial resources available to the individual local authorities and the way these resources are utilized. Most of the local governments lack the financial muscles to carry out their duties effectively and efficiently. The basic essence of creating local government is to provide grassroots developments and to perform these functions; they have to be financially stable. However, the position is that most of the local governments are financially handicapped because they are not adequately funded. The principal sources of their income are the statutory allocation and grant from the federation accounts. Others are internally generated revenue, loans and investment. The argument is that most of the 774 Local Government Councils are not financially viable, particularly those in the rural areas and are therefore dependent only on the allocations from the federation account.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- discuss over dependence on statutory allocations
- explain undue financial control by the state governments
- discuss problem of tax evasion
- identify lack of business initiatives
- explain diversion of local government allocation.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Over-Dependence on Statutory Allocation

One of the major financial problems of local government is the over dependence on the State and Federal Government statutory allocations and grants. Most of the local governments are not financially viable and so cannot raise the funds needed for the performance of their roles and duties. It has been argued that internally generated revenue forms a very small percentage of the local government revenue which often times is not enough to pay the workers' salaries. It therefore comes to reason that when the statutory allocation is low or irregular, some of the local governments, particularly those in the rural areas find it difficult to perform their constitutional functions.

3.2 Undue Financial Control by the State Government

This is another problem of local governments as it relate to finance. Often times, the state government altered the financial plans of the local government by state polices, either by instructing the local government administration to maintain certain banking or financial regulations or ordering the local government to maintain joint accounts with the state government, this allows the state government to interfere with the finances of the local government. Another chronic financial problem of local government is the unilateral determination by states governments of the limits of income and of the income group local government can tax. In the process, the state selects the lucrative areas for themselves and allows the local government those areas that do not yield much income. Coupled with this, is the problem of revenue sharing formula which is always changing in favor of the higher levels of government. The local government often times does not have a say or contribution in determining the revenue sharing formula. Therefore, the revenue to the local government most times is always changing and unstable. There has been time when local government received zero-allocation from the federation account. The effect is that most of the local governments cannot break even or meet up with their financial obligations.

3.3 Problem of Tax Evasion

Another problem is the issue of tax evasion. This is a very serious issue because the local government does not have adequate statistical data of both employed and unemployed; therefore, tax evasion is very prevalent in the local Councils. This is coupled with the fact that the instruments of collection of the taxes are very crude and undeveloped.

Sometimes, the tax collectors are not trained on the principles and method of tax collection.

3.4 Lack of Business Initiatives

Another problem is the lack of business initiatives by the local governments. Most of the local government depends solely on statutory allocation, internally generated revenue and grants at the expense of investing or formulating business ventures that can generate revenue for the development of the communities. There is also the problem of corruption and mismanagement, local government official have often times corruptly enriched themselves from the little fund meant for the execution of economic and social services. These officials often times perceived local government funds as their personal money. Some local government officials have embezzled government funds through the execution of white elephant projects.

3.5 Diversion of Local Government Allocation

Local governments have consistently faced the problem of diversion of their allocated funds. They often times do not get the right funding allocated to it by the budgeting authorities. The fund budgeted to local governments are either not released on time, or where it is, the correct amount do not get to the local government councils. The fund allocated are sometimes intercepted and hijacked by the state governments under the guise of financial control and accountability. These situations of diverting local government funds were very visible under the President Obasanjo civilian administration under the guise of state and local government joint account.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Examine how tax evasion is a major problem to local government financial administration and development.

4.0 CONCLUSION

Finance is one of the major cardinal issues involves in the development and administration of local government. Lack of adequate finance will continue to be a recurrent decimal as long as the problems identified above persists. For instance, the unemployed professional, traders, market women, the unemployed and artisans make up the bulk of the population in the local government. These groups of people are the ones that evade tax the more and they are very difficult to tax and to track. In essence, for local government to increase and improve on their financial conditions, they must devise strategies and means of tackling some of the problems enumerated above. They must reduce their over-reliance on statutory allocations and grants from States and Federal Governments. They must train their personnel on the modern issues and method of tax collection. The local government must also develop a method of curtailing the excesses of their officials in official spending and embezzlement. They must learn to be business oriented in order to create a viable local government that can solve the socio-economic and developmental programmes of the people. They must learn above all to increase their internally generated revenue without placing the burden on the people.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

One of the challenges that hampered the performance of the local government administration is diversion of its fund and other vital resources. Monthly allocations from Federation account and internally generated revenue which ought to provide the much needed capital for developmental strives are constantly being siphoned.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you will be able to:

- explain the meaning of Misappropriation of Fund
- discuss the types of Misappropriation of Fund
- discuss the effects of that Misappropriation in administration of local government.
- discuss the strategies for curbing Misappropriation of local government funds.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 The Meaning of Misappropriation

It is an act of taking somebody's money or property for yourself especially when they have trusted you to take care of it. Misappropriation of public fund refers to diversion of money meant to solve problems that affect the people to private use. In respect to local government administration, corruption and diversion of fund are intractable problems that appear to defile any remedy. The above menace has deteriorated to the extent that the only visible obligation of some local government administration is payment of salary of workers. Articulation and execution of capital projects, provision of social amenities, social and welfare schemes for rural dwellers, primary healthcare, etc are either abandoned or not in existent at all.

3.2 Types of Misappropriation of fund in the Local Government System

The above refers to various extra-judicial means adopted and developed by leaders and staff of their local government to defraud huge sums of money from its coffers. These include:

- a. Contract inflation
- b. Fictions contract
- c. Ghost workers
- d. Travel allowance
- e. Privatization of government owned property, etc.

Inflation of the cost of contract is a major avenue through which chairmen and principal officers of local government system stifle the economy of the system. Contracts are also awarded on non-existent projects in the bid to 'retire' the fund of the local government. Fictions names of workers are added to nominal roll with attendant in wage bill. The salaries of these non-existent workers are paid into the accounts of these principal officers. Allowances are drawn from the purse of the local government for trips that most times are spurious. Some property and services rendered by the local government are privatized without the interest of the people but rather to the benefit of leaders of local government and their cronies.

3.3 The Effects of Misappropriation of Fund on Administration of Local Government

Local Government Act of 1976 as amended bequeaths certain statutory roles on local government system which include:

- a. Payment of her staff salary
- b. Construction and maintenance of markets
- c. Collection of rates
- d. Collection of markets and motor parks tolls
- e. Construction and management of motor parks
- f. Construction and maintenance of public conveniences
- g. Construction and maintenance of rural feeder or access roads

- h. Construction, equipping and management of health centres.
- i. Construction and supervision of abattoirs, etc.

The above roles require fund for executions. Misappropriation of fund has incapacitated local government in grappling with the above responsibilities. Hence the call by certain citizens for the scrapping of local government system.

3.4 Strategies for Curbing Misappropriation of Fund in the Local Government System

These include: Budget defense, Project monitoring, E.F.C.C, Public-Private Partnership. Chairmen of local governments are expected every year to present budget estimates for each year to the Legislative arm of the local government for consideration. The Legislature is at liberty to review such budgets. The process of approving and executing the budget is always couched with some irregularities such as budget padding. Projects being implemented by local government system are subjected to various supervisions from supervisory councilors, state and federal relevant agencies. Adoption of Public-Private Partnership has proven potent in checking and pruning down Misappropriation of public fund at local government level. The emergence of Economic and Financial Crimes Commission has provided the much needed platform for prosecution of corrupt officials of government of the local government. Independent Corrupt Practices Commission (ICPC) and other agencies engaged in the fight against corruption should beam their searchlights to the local governments to checkmate the high level of corruption ravaging the system.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Examine the effects of Misappropriation of fund on Local Government Administration in Nigeria.

4.0 CONCLUSION

Due to the economic quagmire prevalent in the local government system, there is need to articulate viable strategies to control corruption, misappropriation of fund and related cases of abuse of office at the local government level. There is need to revamp the local government administration in Nigeria so as to strengthen the local government to involve the best financial practice in the administration. The Local Government as presently constituted has been a platform for sharing monthly allocation and diversion of internally generated revenue.

5.0 SUMMARY

This unit has examined the effects of Misappropriation of fund of local government in Nigeria. It has highlighted the steps needed to combat this menace and repositioned the local government to fulfill its statutory obligations.
